

CANTON STILL AGITATED

ANOTHER BATCH OF NEW YORKERS
CALL ON MAJOR M'KINLEY.

Measures, Hiss, Porter, Cragger, Brookfield and Others Visit the Nominee—Mr. Hiss on Milholland's Nomination of Warner Miller for Governor of New York—Major McKinley Speaks to Delegates

The farmers bring their produce to market and lay it out to supply the groceries and restaurants for several days, and to-day the commercial instinct triumphed over the spirit of jubilation which held full sway in the city for several days past.

Temporary surrender was made now and then as the rolls of drums, the blasts of bugles, and the notes of cornets announced the passing of the delegations to Major McKinley's home. But on the whole Canton was much more quiet than at any time since Thursday. The cohorts of horsemen have systematized the work of receiving and handling the guests. The residents are tired and weary with shouting, and now the noise comes almost wholly from the bands.

During the early day the visitors came in as strangers, but as the day advanced they became more frequent, and in the afternoon consisted of organized delegations with bands, banners, and bugles. The sunset hour drew nearly the same beguile-like conditions prevailing as when the North Carolina delegation, headed by Governor Holden, came to the city in support of McKinley's nomination for President.

The most notable visit of the day was made by a New York party travelling with Gen. Horace Porter in his private car, the Celtic. The party came from the St. Louis Convention, and was composed of twenty-five persons, as follows: Gen. Porter, Major-General John M. Palmer, Gen. Amos G. McKook, Gen. C. H. T. Collins, Col. S. Y. R. Granger, Col. Henry H. Prentiss, field, Sen. or, Ohio; Senator Frank D. Pavy, New York; Richard J. Lewis, ex-member of the New York Assembly; the Hon. Robert Miller, ex-member of the New York Assembly; the Hon. William Brookfield, the Hon. Andre Jacobs, Henry C. Robinson, William S. Bagge, Thomas F. Egan, Benjamin Oppenheimer, John J. G. Gahan, George A. G. Gahan, Dedd, Thomas Humphreys, E. McMillan, Mortu Leslie, J. F. McGowan, and Lloyd Collin.

The party took start cars to the McKim residence, where they paid their respects to Major and Mrs. McKim and the Major's mother, remaining in the city some four or five hours. They assured the Major and his family of their sympathy and expressed their satisfaction with the work of the St. Louis Convention, and pledged him their hearty and undivided support.

Mr. Bliss, when asked as to the sentiment of the Milwaukee expressed last night in introducing the subject of the St. Louis Convention, said:
